

RISK RESONANCE

One full day
To focus on Innovation and Creativity in Risk Communication in memory of Pablo Suarez

About

Risk Resonance Day is a full-day symposium showcasing innovation and creativity in risk communication. It will bring together practitioners, communications professionals, researchers and policymakers involved in communicating a wide range of risks to diverse audiences. The event will offer fresh perspectives on impactful communication from leaders in the visual arts, media, music and other creative fields to inspire and push out the boundaries of risk communication. It will also provide a forum to learn from others, to consider what has worked, what has gone wrong, what was unique, and what can be replicated or scaled.

The aim of this event is connect people motivated to help the public understand risks better and to take informed decisions, with a view to achieving healthier and safer outcomes for everyone.

Who is it for

- Professionals in public, private and civil society organizations involved in assessing, reducing and managing risks who are interested in the role of communication
- Frontline risk practitioners working with communities to identify and manage risks
- Researchers from across disciplines including decision science, communications and media, healthcare, environmental sciences, disaster risk reduction, psychology and behavioural sciences, etc.
- Creatives working in risk communication or adjacent fields.
- Journalists and communications experts with knowledge to share.
- Funders and donors concerned with the human elements of disaster risk reduction .
